

Connections between basic infrastructure and industrial commons in Hungary

Arpad Duczon

University of Pecs Faculty of Business and Economics
arpad.duczon@gmail.com

Pisano and Shih wrote about „industrial commons” in 2012. It means a critical mass of buyers, suppliers, competitors, infrastructure, educated workforce and universities in a geographical area. Their theory was based on American experience but in East-Central Europe it has many differences. The most spectacular element of this system is the basic infrastructure. In my presentation I would like to point out that governments can create such „industrial commons” and decide where to invest first.